

World Trade Center 9.11 Health Program Certified Conditions

Once enrolled and before you can begin treatment in the World Trade Center (WTC) Health Program, you must get your conditions certified as WTC-related.

What is a certified condition?

The Program certifies WTC-related health conditions that are in 5 main categories:

Acute
Traumatic
Injuries

Musculo-skeletal
Disorders

Airway/
Digestive Disorders

Mental Health

Cancer

A certified WTC-related health condition is a diagnosed condition that is approved for coverage by the WTC Health Program. In order for a condition to be certified you must meet the Program requirements for certification described below.

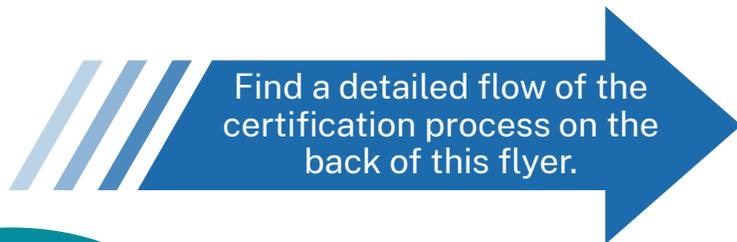

WTC Health Program Certification Requirements

How does a condition get certified?

The first step towards getting a condition certified is to have a medical examination by a Program provider. These examinations, often called Initial Health Evaluations or Annual Monitoring Exams, are covered for eligible members.

If your doctor finds a potential WTC-related health condition during your health evaluation, they may submit a certification to the Program if all Program criteria are met. The Program reviews the request and then will notify you about the certification decision.

Learn more about what conditions are covered by the Program at cdc.gov/wtc/conditions.html

All statistics are valid as of 06/2024.

Path to Certification

